TIBURON

Tucked along the shoreline of Marin County, Tiburon feels like a town that decided to slow down on purpose. Sailboats drift past a row of pastel storefronts, the bay stretches out toward San Francisco in the distance, and the air carries that particular mix of salt water and eucalyptus you only find here. Whether you're wandering the wooden decks of Main Street, catching the ferry with a coffee in hand, or watching the fog roll back to reveal the skyline, Tiburon has a way of making you want to stay just a little longer than planned.

Places that define Tiburon

From maritime landmarks and historic churches to locally owned shops and dining spots overlooking the bay, Tiburon's appeal extends well beyond its postcard-worthy setting. Together, these institutions and newer arrivals tell the story of a town shaped by railroads, ferries, and a strong sense of community.

Visitors may arrive for views of San Francisco and bayside dining, but they soon discover that Tiburon's historic spaces continue to host celebrations, community events, and everyday moments, turning local history into something that's still lived rather than simply remembered.

CHINA CABIN

Few land marks in Tiburon are as surprising as China Cabin. Once the first-class social saloon aboard the paddle-wheel steamer PS China, the ornate structure was salvaged before the ship was scrapped and eventually restored as a National Maritime Treasure.

Today, its crystal chandeliers, etched glass, gold-leaf details, and elaborate walnut woodwork create a romantic and sophisticated port of call for weddings, cocktail receptions, and private parties.

OLD ST. HILARY'S CHURCH

Blink, and you might miss one of Tiburon's most recognizable and charming landmarks, Old St. Hilary's Church, poised on a hillside above town. Built in 1888 for local railroad workers, the white clapboard Carpenter Gothic chapel overlooks Richardson Bay, Angel Island, and the San Francisco skyline and hosts numerous weddings and concerts each year.

RAILROAD & FERRY DEPOT MUSEUM

Before Tiburon became a top San Francisco Bay Area destination, it was a major transportation hub. The Railroad & Ferry Depot Museum traces the town's evolution from terminus of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad to waterfront community through photographs, artifacts, and exhibits that bring Tiburon's past to life.

For visitors exploring downtown, it's an easy stroll along Shoreline Park to the grey one-room museum building at the edge of the bay.

ARK ROW

No walk through Tiburon is complete without a meander along Ark Row. The converted houseboats, called arks, were originally built in the late 1800s and early 1900s for wealthy San Franciscans who used these Victorian abodes as summer homes, weekend retreats, and floating party venues to escape foggy San Francisco.

Today, the weathered wooden structures house shops, galleries, and restaurants, giving downtown Tiburon much of its character.

SHOPPING AROUND TOWN

Tiburon is made for wandering and browsing, and the town's businesses reflect the same easygoing character that draws visitors and neighbors year-round.

Main Street Mercantile is a longtime local favorite with an upscale general store feel. Filled with carefully selected women's clothing, home décor, gifts, and entertaining essentials, it's the kind of place where a quick browse often turns into a much longer visit. An oft-overlooked find by visitors is Corner Books, packed with gently used books, DVDs, CDs, puzzles, and unexpected finds. Better still, proceeds support programs and services at the Belvedere-Tiburon Library, making every purchase a small investment in the community. Nearby, treasure hunters browse Tiburon Thrift Shop for vintage furniture, housewares, clothing, and curiosities, with proceeds benefiting local nonprofit organizations. Music lovers often make a pilgrimage to Schoenberg Guitars, a petite shop known for its collection of fine new and vintage acoustic instruments. For those eager to explore farther afield, Demo Sport offers bike and e-bike rentals just steps from the ferry dock. It's an easy starting point for a ride through Tiburon or a cycling adventure on Angel Island.

WHERE TIBURON GATHERS

With its bayside setting, small-town charm, and easy access from San Francisco, Tiburon has long been a favorite for destination weddings, corporate retreats, weekend escapes, and milestone celebrations. While China Cabin and Old St. Hilary's may be the town's most iconic event venues, opportunities to gather extend well beyond its historic landmarks.

Just steps from the ferry dock, Bungalow Kitchen's second-floor salon and sunroom pair sweeping bay views with fireplaces, a television, a pool table, and indoor-outdoor seating.

The flexible space is equally suited to rehearsal dinners, engagement parties, graduation celebrations, and private gatherings with family and friends.

Down the street, Cinelounge Tiburon offers an entirely different vibe. In addition to screening films, the intimate theater at the end of Main Street hosts private screenings, business presentations, and product launches, providing a creative alternative to the typical boardroom setting.

For those planning an overnight stay, Tiburon's two hotels place guests in the heart of downtown. Waters Edge Hotel offers 23 guest rooms and bay views from its back deck. One of its most appealing touches is breakfast delivered directly to guest rooms each morning. For business retreats and small meetings, the hotel's boardroom accommodates up to 18 attendees, and staff can arrange catering and nearby dining reservations, making it easy to transition from strategy sessions to sunset cocktails.

Just a minute from Main Street, the 104-room Lodge at Tiburon features 11,000 square feet of event space for groups of up to 200. Four meeting rooms, a private patio, a pool, fire pits, a Sky Deck lounge, and and an on-site restaurant create opportunities to combine productive work sessions with plenty of time to enjoy the town.

RECHARGE, THE TIBURON WAY

After a morning hike on Angel Island or an afternoon of closed-door strategy sessions, Tiburon's wellness businesses offer a welcome reset, helping ease the effects of long workdays and busy schedules.

At the Boardwalk Shopping Center, Tiburon Spa has a solid selection of facials, deep-tissue massages, and even private yoga sessions designed to ease tired legs and busy minds after a day of hiking, cycling, or meetings. Nearby, Eva Clairborn's customized skincare treatments have earned a loyal following among clients preparing for wedding-day photos, milestone birthday parties, and those moments when a little extra glow is well worth the effort. Meanwhile, Kinetic Waves offers massage and Japanese therapies, such as Reiki, to relieve stress and replenish the body's life energy.

An indulgence? Sure. Well-earned after a weekend of hiking, cycling, shopping, and meetings? Absolutely.

THE ENDURING APPEAL OF TIBURON

Part of what makes Tiburon so memorable isn't just the restaurants, hotels, and landmark locations. It's the way all of them exist in a setting where bay views, open space, and small-town charm are never far away.

Arrive by ferry from San Francisco. Spend the day exploring trails, browsing independently owned shops, and discovering a bit of local history. Then settle in at a waterfront table as the sun slips behind the Golden Gate Bridge.

In Tiburon, it's easy to fit a lot of wonder into a single day. And it's just as easy to understand why so many visitors return again and again.

Dining in Tiburon

WATERFRONT TABLES, WINE BARS, & LOCAL FAVORITES

In Tiburon, dining is rarely just about the food, though you'll find it's pretty amazing, too.

Meals unfold against a backdrop of water and sky, ferry horns sounding in the distance, San Francisco skyline views, and sunsets that are pretty good at convincing you to order one more glass of wine.

Like the town itself, Tiburon's dining scene balances sophistication with ease. Waterfront cocktails and caviar tastings coexist comfortably alongside fish tacos, neighborhood wine bars, and family-owned restaurants where regulars are greeted by name.

WATERFRONT TABLES

The San Francisco Bay is always the guest of honor at Tiburon's waterfront restaurants.

Date nights and special occasion lunches at Caprice mean tables with front-row views of Angel Island, the Golden Gate Bridge, and the ever-changing pinch-me views of the bay.

Main Street old-timer Sam's Anchor Cafe has been welcoming boaters, locals, and Bay Area visitors for more than 100 years, and the sprawling waterside deck remains one of Marin County's great gathering places, especially on sunny weekends, when people gather for bowls of clam chowder, hearty burgers, fresh seafood, and cold drinks at the outdoor bar.

Nearby, Malibu Farm brings a lighter California sensibility to all-day dining on the waterfront. Think yogurt and granola for breakfast, fresh salads and coconut ceviche for lunch, and build-your-own fish tacos for dinner, Bungalow Kitchen approaches waterside dining with enthusiasm, especially during its Sunset Sips gatherings, offered Tuesday through Friday from 5 to 6 p.m., turning the waterfront into an unofficial Tiburon social club as residents and visitors gather to toast another beautiful evening.

Tucked away from the energy of Sam's and Bungalow Kitchen, Luna Blu is perfect for romantic lunches at an outdoor table, or one-on-one catchups with your bestie in the intimate bayside dining room while savoring linguine vongole, steaming bowls of cioppino, and other seafood and pasta specialties.

WINE ARS & GATHERING SPOTS

Every town has a place where everybody seems to know somebody, and that's precisely the reason they go there. In Tiburon, Mog Asu Wine Bar in the Cove Shopping Center is such a place. On any given evening, neighbors gather over wine flights and small plates while catching up on local news. Sunday bingo and Thursday trivia nights routinely book out weeks in advance, turning the unassuming spot into something resembling Tiburon's version of Cheers.

Just steps away, Troya brings family recipes and a welcome sense of discovery to Marin County's dining. The menu moves comfortably between traditional Turkish and Mediterranean favorites and dishes less commonly found on local breakfast and brunch menus.

The Istanbul breakfast, shakshuka, and lamb burgers have all developed loyal followings among locals. But you can just as easily drop by to share mezzes and a glass of crisp Greek wine with a friend in an environment that feels as fresh and inviting as what's served on the plate.

Along Tiburon's historic Ark Row, Servino Ristorante and neighboring Enoteca Servino bring a convivial taste taste of Italy to downtown. House-made pastas, regional specialties, and a lively patio keep locals returning, while regular wine tastings bring friends and family out for impromptu celebrations.

No discussion of Tiburon's wine scene would be complete without mention of Squalo Vino, Main Street's de facto wine bar and tasting room, home to a stellar list of red, white, and sparkling elixirs you won't find at the grocery store. Choose from 15 wines by the glass, more than 90 wines by the bottle, and locally brewed beers. Nibble a little cheese and charcuterie, and suddenly, happy hour feels like a party.

And for those in search of something elevated, The Caviar Co. offers guided tastings for newbies that are as indulgent as they are educational. Aficionados can order flights of sustainably sourced caviar, pop a bottle of champagne, and experience something unique in a chic Main Street tasting lounge.

CASUAL FAVORITES & GRAB-AND-GO FINDS

Not every meal in Tiburon requires a reservation. Just steps from the ferry, commuters pick up cappuccinos and pastries at Caffe Acri before zipping across the bay to San Francisco, while regulars and cyclists linger at outdoor tables before their rides and walks along the waterfront.

Just a short walk away, Rustic Bakery has become a morning ritual for many locals, whether they're dropping by for organic juice and a strawberry shortcake scone or avocado toast and a chai latte. For travelers and locals on the go, the list of salads and sandwiches is as varied as the Bay Area weather and ideal for picnics on Angel Island or for taking back to your hotel balcony.

And speaking of ideal, the burritos and tacos at Lola's Taqueria are unrivaled.

Eat them on their small but colorful patio or stash them in your backpack before a trip and photo session up at Hippie Tree.

FIND YOUR DINING RHYTHM IN TIBURON

Part of Tiburon's dining appeal is that while restaurants may differ, they share something in common—they are all unmistakably Tiburon.

A waterfront lunch on a patio easily turns into an afternoon by the bay. One glass of wine in an effortlessly stylish wine bar feels like a celebration. And sunsets always inspire awe, inviting visitors to slow down, strike up conversations, and savor the flavors and the town's hallmark easy-going rhythm.

Tiburon

WHERE NATURE MEETS THE BAY

Perched on a narrow peninsula in southern Marin County, Tiburon has long attracted people who want proximity to San Francisco's energy without surrendering entirely to it.

An easy ferry ride or road trip across the Bay, the historic railroad town-turned-waterfront hideaway feels like someone quietly lowered the stress volume and amped up the tree count.

San Francisco still shimmers in the distance as Karl the Fog—the area's infamous marine layer—drapes theatrically over skyscrapers and the Golden Gate

But life in Tiburon moves at a gentler clip. It's not something that's planned or scheduled.

It just is.

Here, gulls bob on wind-shaped whitecaps. Seals poke their whiskers out of the water just offshore. And a palette of blue sky, verdant hillsides, and the cool grey Pacific Ocean paint the setting in coastal artistry every day of the year.

Despite its reputation for affluence, Tiburon's greatest asset and pleasure might be its down-to-earth character and access to the kind of nature you dream about seeing when you arrive in San Francisco.

The town, by turns, is polished and outdoorsy, making it attractive in the way only the best Northern California destinations are—sophisticated, scenic, and deeply tied to nature.

It's not uncommon for waterfront cocktails and caviar tastings to share the same afternoon as a shopping stroll, a sunset ferry ride, and a hike through a state park with Golden Gate Bridge views.

Open-water adventures, quiet trail hikes, bridge-to-bridge panoramas, and wildlife spotting may feel extraordinary to visitors, but in Tiburon, they're simply part of an average day that's usually anything but.

THE TIBURON WATERFRONT IS THE MAIN EVENT

The San Francisco Bay is never just background scenery. It shapes nearly everything around here.

Downtown Tiburon unfolds along Main Street, skirting a marina where sailboats bob near umbrella-covered decks, unique boutiques sell chic apparel, and outside tables in the sunshine mean catching up with old friends

On clear days, the skyline of San Francisco rises dramatically from the water along Shoreline Park, while Angel Island sits just offshore like a green, mountainous invitation.

Unlike some seaside towns that feel curated primarily for tourists, Tiburon is also an address for Bay Area residents who appreciate being just close enough to a big city to take advantage of its vibrant culture, while returning home from the office to a place they can slow down, unplug, and enjoy outdoor living, whatever the definition is that day.

Early mornings bring cyclists to Caffe Acri for espresso fuel-ups before pedaling the Paradise Loop, while dog walkers meander along Shoreline Park, past neighbors making their first Wordle guesses on benches facing the rippling water.

By afternoon, friends gather over tacos at Lola's Taqueria, couples settle into Squalo Vino for a toast over California wine, and sunset seekers angle for window tables at Caprice as the Golden Gate Bridge slips into evening fog. The best part— there is no pretense whatsoever. Tiburon's small-town welcomes and affable attitudes are relaxed but refined, active but never aggressive.

One of the best ways to succumb to the easy pace of life is simply by walking.

Whether browsing the boutiques of Main Street or lacing up for longer hikes, Tiburon constantly shifts between polished waterfront town and outdoor coastal playground. Fishermen and sailboats one moment, San Francisco skyline and fog the next, all within striking distance of fresh oysters on the deck at Sam's Anchor Café. The Old Rail Trail: Downtown to Blackie's Pasture.

If one path captures Tiburon's personality better than anywhere else, it might be the Old Rail Trail.

Built along a former Northwestern Pacific Railroad route, the mostly flat waterfront trail stretches along Richardson Bay from downtown Tiburon to Blackie's Pasture, with views that make even casual walkers consider selfies they swear they'd never take.

On one side of the 2.5-mile path, homes cling to the hillside, windows angled toward Mount Tamalpais or the towers of the Golden Gate Bridge

On the other side, marshes and shoreline habitats attract herons, egrets, gulls, and migrating waterfowl, curiosities for visitors to the nearby Richardson Bay Audubon Center & Sanctuary and local conservationists around Richardson Bay.

Some mornings bring family bike rides, jogging strollers, and golden retrievers straining happily at their leashes. Others feel almost meditative, with only lapping water, distant fog horns, and birdsong filling the air.

Depending on the season, the Old Rail Trail, like the surrounding Tiburon hills, is colored with delicate golden poppies, green coastal grasses, and bursts of purple and yellow wildflowers waving in the wind.

Even a short walk here has a way of resetting your nervous system, like Tiburon's built-in moment of Zen.

TIBURON'S WILD SIDE

Visitors who only stay near the waterfront won't be disappointed but branching reveals more of Tiburon's natural surprises.

Just above the picturesque downtown and elegant hillside homes lies Ring Mountain Preserve, a rugged landscape of rocky outcroppings, yellow and purple blooms, and panoramic viewpoints with landscapes that feel far removed from downtown Tiburon, despite being only minutes away.

The preserve is particularly beautiful in spring, when wildflowers spread like a tapestry over the hillsides and rare native plants emerge among the rocks. Trails weave through open terrain with sweeping views toward Mount Tamalpais, the San Francisco skyline, Angel Island, and the Bay Bridge beyond.

There's very little shade here, which only adds to the preserve's rugged, windswept Northern California beauty. This is also where Tiburon begins to lean into its lovable and quirky Marin County personality.

Tucked among the hills is the unofficially famous Hippie Tree, a longtime local landmark perched with remarkable views over the bay.

Reaching it requires a bit of effort and a dash of local knowledge, which somehow makes arriving there feel like discovering a secret.

Once there, it's hard not to feel nostalgic for simpler pleasures, kicking and pulling as the swing arcs higher and higher under the branches of the giant eucalyptus tree.

ANGEL ISLAND: NATURAL MARVEL & CALIFORNIA HISTORY

In Tiburon, outdoor adventure can be as easy as heading downtown. No maps or hours of planning needed.

From the dock, board the Angel Island–Tiburon Ferry and step off in Ayala Cove in Angel Island State Park. In just 10 minutes, you'll have traded Main Street's boutique shopping and boozy brunch stops for hiking trails, historic buildings, and some of the most spectacular San Francisco Bay Area views you'll find anywhere.

Often called the "Ellis Island of the West" because of its immigration history, Angel Island is not only rich in natural beauty but also in California history.

The 5-mile Perimeter Trail circles the island with near constant land and sea views, while more ambitious hikers can climb to the summit of Mount Livermore for a staggering 360-degree panorama that stretches from the Golden Gate Bridge to the Bay Bridge and, on clear days, even to Mount Diablo in the East Bay.

And unlike many famous outdoor destinations in California, Angel Island still retains a sense of calm. Even on busy weekends, there are moments when the only sounds you'll hear are the wind through trees and the crunch of distant bike tires on gravel paths. It's a kind of quiet that feels deeply indulgent, so close to a city like San Francisco.

Visitors can rent bicycles near the ferry landing during certain times of year, pack a picnic lunch and barbecue, or take a segway or open-air tram tour to discover the island's abundant beauty and historic sites such as Camp Reynolds, Angel Island Immigration Station, and more. Or simply sit near the dock with coffee and a snack from Angel Island Café and watch kayakers and sailboats zigzag through the blue water.

TIBURON: THE ART OF BALANCE

One thing that never gets old for residents and visitors to Tiburon is that nature and lifestyle happily intertwine.

A waterfront lunch at Luna Blu is perfect after a long walk around trails and fire roads in the Old Saint Hilary's Open Space Preserve. By late afternoon, Tiburon begins to glow in the sunset, and neighbors meet up for Sunday night bingo or Thursday trivia night at Mog Asu Wine Bar in the Cove Shopping Center.

Ferry passengers return to San Francisco, sun-tired, while overnight guests return to the Waters Edge Hotel to watch the sunset from the back deck before catching the latest blockbuster down the street at Cinelounge as a gust of salt air twirls down Main Street.

In Tiburon, nature never stays politely in the background.

It's part of the rhythm of the place, and a reminder that warm welcomes, salt air, and unhurried afternoons by the bay are luxuries to savor, wherever you go.
